Existence of the External World: Idealistic Perspective

in Lankāvatāra Sūtra

Kattakaduwe Chandawimala Thera
Department of Buddhist Philosophy, Buddhist and Pali University of Sri Lanka
revchandawimala@gmail.com

Idealism is a philosophical approach that conceptualizes reality or reality as we can know it, as fundamentally mental, mentally constructed, or otherwise immaterial. The term “Idealism” is defined as "the belief that our ideas are the only things that are and that we can know about". Yogācāra tradition was developed based on the theory of "consciousness only" (viñaptimātratā) and to a greater extent on phenomenological analyses of personal experience.

Lankāvatāra Sūtra is included in the category of Vaipulya (sacred) sūtra. There are nine basic Sūtras in Mahayana Buddhism called navadharmas and Lankāvatāra Sūtra is one of them which explains the theory of Viññāṇavāda. The listener of this sutra is Mahāmate Bodhisattva. It was with the influence of the teachings of this sutra that Yogācāra tradition and its fundamental teachings were developed in Mahayana tradition.

In the second chapter of this sūtra the theory of cause and effect is divided into two aspects as Interior and Exterior. In that context exterior cause and effect theory is explained as follows.

Lump of clay, a stick, a potter's wheel, a thread, water, a worker, his effort and all together form the existence of a jar. The jar means one of the things in the external world. In this sūtra not only the jar but also a piece of cloth, a sprout is also explained by using exterior cause and effect theory. The conclusion of this paper is to show that the Yogācāra Viññāṇavāda is not mere idealism. The external world exists in accordance with the theory of exterior causality albeit this tradition refuses the existence of the external world.

Key words: Yogācāra Viññāṇavāda, Lankāvatāra Sūtra, Existence, External World